TWIN TOWERS: THE SEPARATION

BY ANAAMYA PANCHAL &
ADVAY VAIDYA

The year is 2001. Every newspaper reads the same headline: 'HORROR IN THE SKY'. The infamous 9/11 has occurred. An immediate night crisis committee has assembled at HFSMUN'23. With the agenda 'Post 9/11: Afghanistan Invasion', the room brimmed with anticipation and chaos as evident tension engulfed it.

Taxing SSLs from important personalities like George Bush and Mohammad Fahim initiated the event. It did not take long for the digs, derogatory remarks, and disrespectful allegations to roll in. Jean Chretien, the Prime Minister of Canada, tried to bring peace and order to the committee by proposing economic sanctions and a thorough investigation to find the reason for the horrifying event. However, the agitated delegates were quick to shoot this idea down, with George W. Bush questioning how economic sanctions would take place on an organisation that "is not recognised by the UN and does not even reveal its sources of income!"

Things were soon to heat up. According to Mohammad Omar, the leader of the Taliban, all those who died on 9/11 are "atheist pigs." Further, "AMERICA IS MORE DISGRACEFUL THAN THE MUD ON OUR SHOES" was the cry that came from him. Not just him; almost all speakers made bold statements and felt no remorse to target their enemy states. With table bangs after almost every SSL, the Crisis was booming with controversies when they broke up for the unmoderated caucus.

Only more charged up from the lobbying during the unmoderated caucus, the delegates came up with three directives:

BROKEN DREAMS, led by Saddam Hussein and Vladimir Putin, among others; ISAF, led by John McColl and George W. Bush; and finally, MASHALLAH, led by Mohammad Omar and Pervez Musharraf, among others. With innovative names came even more ingenious ideas and motions, which were all passed by the committee with a majority.

A quick 2v2 discussion of the agenda concluded this adrenaline-rushing crisis committee for the day. Before breaking up, a new crisis struck. New York has been bombed. Destroyed to the core. What will the night crisis committee do now? The surprise awaits us next!

NIGHT CRISIS COMMITTEE

September 11th, 2001.

08:04 a.m.

A dark dilapidated room, Old School, HFS.

The bombing of New York shook everybody to the core. Not just that, but more calamities are on the rise. The UN is destroyed. Kofi Annan is dead. America has officially declared war on Afghanistan, and the Suez Canal has been captured, blocking all trade routes. Catastrophes are the only thing gripping the world.

All world leaders, too, are wreaking havoc. Mohammad Nab Omari warned to demolish the Empire State Building altogether and further said, 'If you do not come to your senses, we will COME FOR YOU!' Mohammad Omar, leader of the Taliban, in his controversial speech, pronounced the late victims of the bombing 'atheist, filthy pigs.' The Western personalities did not back down either. Anthony Blair boldly remarked that Britain ruled over Afghanistan and would not mind doing it again.

Mohammad Omar, supporting his head of communications, displayed passion and fury as he threatened to launch missiles into Paris, Moscow, and Washington, D.C. In response, Saddam Hussein insulted him by questioning how they would even fund this mission, and since their trial missions have not been tested over 600km, their missiles will not even make it past their own territory.

Immense gravity filled the room as the USA officially declared war on the Middle East. Not just externally, tension is also rising within the country. Angry men and women in the Middle East are revolting against their stringent laws. In retaliation, the Afghans and Arabs clogged the Suez Canal and blocked all the trade routes. Terrorists have no care for safety; they are ruthlessly bombing anything and everything in sight.

Disaster struck in all spheres.

The climax of this movie-like committee was the valiant final statements in the 3v3 given by George W. Bush, Mohammad Omar, Maulana Masood Azad, John McColl, and Osama Bin Laden.

The wrap-up of this glorious, time-ticking crisis committee was rather dark. Pakistan bombed the Indian state of Kashmir, destroyed Tamil Nadu, and took several lives. The dilemma was global. The Middle East was completely dispersed and reduced to nothing more than a wasteland. The multiple bombings caused a chain reaction, which, in turn, ruined the ozone layer of the Earth.

Finally, the true horrors of war, destruction, and aggression emerged, extinguishing all life, decimating every organism, and plunging the world into an irreversible collapse.

HOW'S THE JOSH? DOLLAR SIR!

BY ADVIKA MANE AND DISHA ANGADI

"We are the U.S., and we never back down!"

The committee buckled up to come up with comprehensive solutions for the agenda at hand. This, of course, meant the division of the committee into distinct blocs, with the USA and Russia taking charge.

The Presidential Address by the USA sparked quite a controversy. The USA stated that it wants to work hand-in-hand with other countries. As soon as it completed its address, Russia, as eager as ever, delivered a 30-second address urging the committee to favour the Chinese Yuan instead of the Dollar. Truly a tight spot!

Upon being questioned about the advantages of adopting the Chinese Yuan, The USA confidently said that the dollar promotes diversification unlike any other country in the world since most countries don't trust their citizens enough to permit them access to the globe. As the line of inquiry continued, Qatar, who was mockingly called "Andrew Tate", said that it is quite a shame that the riyal is twice as valuable in comparison to the Dollar. The USA, full of josh, said, "Oil has more rights than women in your country!" Shocking everyone.

A motion was moved about the causes of De-Dollarization. 2 power blocs:

Bloc 1: Japan and Denmark, and Bloc 2: Israel and the USA—truly an interesting bunch!

After some restless back and forth, Israel said that "A spark against the Dollar was created, and the spark was simply not enough!" The tension only thickened. Denmark then accused the USA of rising debt. The USA asked for justifications for the countries without gold that need Dollars to sustain themselves. Cameroon stated that China, too, has its own gold reserves. Israel, out of impulse, yelled out, "Even Dharavi has at least one tonne of gold." Confusion and laughter gripped the committee. Israel further accuses the opposite bloc of valuing gold reserves over its own people. The delegate received backlash. Israel got defensive and said, "Stop mocking me!" In the end, Denmark said, "Stop Mansplaining everything and listen!" Still, the fight went on until it was stopped by the chair.

In conclusion, the session was marked by turmoil, and the rift between the two blocs escalated. All culminating in an intriguing end, which has created much anticipation for the Finale tomorrow, Kaun Banega Crorepati?

In connection with the USA's previous statement, Saudi Arabia said that women, too, don't have many rights in the USA. To which it boldly proclaimed, "It is not Pakistan that I am representing!". Bitter with disrespect, Pakistan said, "For a country that has more guns than people, you sure have a lot to say!" Oof, burn!

The Indian Crisis Cabinet concluded the previous day in an exhilarating fashion as the United India protests died down on the order of Veer Savarkar and AIML. Veer Savarkar received official authorization from the British and Constituent Assembly to investigate the assassination of Prince Phillip. In the midst of this, Mohammed Wavell and Khan Abdul Gaffar Khan were declared proud members of the AIML.

V.P. Menon was of the opinion that if the country isn't divided into two, it will have to be divided into many. He reiterated that Nehru aspires to keep the country consolidated only because of his need for supreme power and selfish gains.

Veer Savarkar was delighted to welcome Sardar Vallabhai Patel and any other member of the INC who wished to join the Hindu Mahasabha. Nehru passionately expressed that dividing the nation would be akin to "cutting the legs of a horse." However, when he failed to gain the support of the masses, he responded to previous allegations, asserting that some leaders were blaming him out of their own jealousy and incompetence to lead the INC.

Right after this, the committee broke into its first crisis of the day. The occupation of the Golden Temple by British soldiers intensifies the "Punjab question," triggering Sikh-led protests and riots across the region, supported by Hindu and Muslim leaders. Amidst this, the emergence of the Khalistan Swatantrata Dal and concerns about creating a Sikh-majority state called Khalistan complicate the situation further. Up first, taking a bold stance, Jinnah went on to say, "Khalistanis are roaches! And we must get rid of these roaches."

MOHAMMAD GANDHI?

By Reeva Khandelwal, Advay Vaidya & Anusha Bhide

Soon after this, Mohammed Ali Jinnah was brutally assassinated by Mohammed Wavell and Kazi Abdul Ghaffar. Wavell claimed that he carried out the act due to his belief that Jinnah was an 'incompetent leader' and that peaceful methods to resolve the crisis were not accepted by the Muslim masses. Consequently, Wavell took matters into his own hands, "a small price to pay for salvation."

As the news of Jinnah's passing sank in, the Magistrate of Delhi revealed the contents of Jinnah's will, which designated Kazi Abdul Gaffar as the Chairperson of AIML and Mohammed Wavell as the Secretary General.

That was when the lights went out.

The committee, still processing the previous information, was bombarded by the International Press, demanding answers. The press, backed up by compelling evidence, cornered prominent figures like Gandhi, Nehru, Agha Khan III, Mohammad Wavell, and Kazi Abdur Zafar. First on the spot was Gandhi, who was questioned about his leadership and influence, to which he struggled to provide a clear answer. Next in line of fire came Jawaharlal Nehru, who, when asked about fostering Hindu-Muslim unity, delved into historical matters rather than addressing the immediate concerns.

Infighting amongst both Hindus and Muslims was evident. Wavell faced inquiries about gaining the trust and faith of the Muslims despite being a Britishman and being associated with Jinnah's demise, for which his counterparts had to defend him. As the conference concluded, the press finally received the answers they had sought, leaving the situation somewhat clarified.

When a motion to discuss the Khalistan issue was passed, the delegates took to the stage to address it. Master Tara Singh stated that the reason for partition was not division but identity, recognition, and power. They demanded a land where Sikhs could live peacefully and happily, as he believed that the Sikhs were not compatible with the rest of the nation. Kazi Abdul Gaffar did not agree with these points.

Mohammed Wavell displayed his power by announcing a Forward Bloc that proposed the formation of Pakistan, a 'haven' for Muslims. Hari Singh strongly felt that the partition could be resolved peacefully and that it was unnecessary. The Amritsar crisis and the issue of Hindu-Muslim unity could be peacefully resolved by granting them certain rights and freedom.

As soon as the Khalistan movement died down, the 1947 MADNESS struck. The British Army strengthens its hold on the Golden Temple, using violence and hostages to quell riots, evoking the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy. Leaked KSD documents expose a covert agreement for the armed paramilitary wing's shift to Shimla in exchange for a British-backed Khalistani state, substantiated by compelling evidence. The AIML is declared illegal, Muslim League members face arrest or execution, and shoot-down orders target prominent figures like Gandhi as ineffective bombs are seized from the Forward Bloc. The British Royal Air Force's bombing of protest centres in Karachi, Dhaka, and Lahore causes widespread casualties, including British casualties, inadvertently striking even British offices amid centralised protests. As these delegates were gearing up to solve these crises, Gandhi stood up and declared his new religion as...

ARTICLE V: TO INVOKE OR NOT TO INVOKE, THAT IS THE QUESTION

BY RIYA NEGANDHI AND SHALVIKAA UDAPURKAR

ILLUSTRATED BY AMODINI GHALKE

On the second day of the HFSMUN, many countries, like Spain, highlighted the need for amendments in Article V concerning its cyber security and wording. As the committee progressed, delegates made riveting speeches and countered their fellow delegates' with bold questions, seen when Russia questioned France, "France itself does not trust NATO; how shall we?"

The delegate of Ukraine surprised everyone, including the executive board, by arriving on the second day after being absent on the first. Being a close ally of NATO, the country received overwhelming support from other committee members. During Ireland's speech, they rightly pointed out that the deaths of 30 villagers did not equate to the actions of thirty countries sanctioning Russia. However, Ireland inadvertently overlooked the "minor" detail of the other 14,000 deaths that occurred later due to Russia's "special military operation" on Ukraine, which persisted for 22 months instead of the intended three days.

It's worth noting that the topic of discussion was the Russia-Ukraine war.

This wasn't the end of Russia's challenges, though. They had to face compelling arguments put forward by the USA and Latvia, describing how Russia went from a "Roaring lion to a meek mouse" and how they attempted to twist topics to gaslight the committee.

After numerous requests, a crisis was finally "granted" that entailed Russia allegedly hacking into Latvia's vital infrastructure. The crisis resulted in the deaths of 15 US cyber professionals and 8 opposition soldiers, as well as the involvement of the Canadian task force, the Latvian military's cybersecurity response division, and the Cyber National Mission Force of the US Cyber Command. It all came down to the majority, with Portugal, Turkey, Ukraine, Denmark, and Bulgaria urging the invocation of Article V and Ireland and Belgium opposing it. While Russia defended itself against being accused without a legal investigation, other members were confident about the allegation against Russia and "Its fragile ego" (The Delegate of Latvia). Thus answering the question of the Shakespeares' of our committee.

'HUGS, NOT DRUGS'

BY NAVYA JOSHI, KIMAYA DESHPANDE
& DHAIRYA PATEL

"It's no lie, drugs will make your momma cry"

The saga continues.

The delegates of the UNSC committee were seen adapting to their environment and feeling more comfortable in their skin. El Salvador and Germany were seen breaking free of their dormant courage and powerful voices. The Russian delegates firmly stated that they do not trust the United Nations, and Germany took offence at this lack of trust from the powerful nation. India wished for the abolition of China's veto power for intruding on India's sovereignty but remained silent when questioned about their breach of Pakistan.

ILLUSTRATED BY AMODINI GHALKE

Next in order was the Mexican communiqué, which barely lasted because another crisis graced the committee, accusing Russia: "Russian acts are nothing less than terrorism in Ukraine".

In a simulated ICJ trial, Russia presented its rationale for the invasion of Ukraine, citing the defense of UN culture and their territorial beliefs. They argued that Ukraine would have agreed with the perceived benefits of the invasion. Moreover, Russia contended that any other country engaging in military action against another should face expulsion from the council, with the exception of themselves.

The trial also witnessed the guest delegate and DISEC Chair, Gia Fernandes, strongly denouncing the USA, accusing it of exploiting its position and repeatedly violating treaties. Gia questioned the legitimacy of the USA's permanent seat on the UN Security Council, arguing that its actions should have led to disqualification from the P5 position from the outset.

ILLUSTRATED BY AMODINI GHALKE

The outcome of this tribunal court resulted in an informal vote, finally expelling Russia's veto power. To everyone's relief, the other crises were resolved when Bhutan closed up the Doklam border to prevent China from crossing and an external organisation was reprimanded for the assassination in France.

South Africa, Columbia, Germany, South Korea, and El Salvador itself, vouched to self-heal through rehabilitation and education and were immediately attacked for not solving their own economies drug dependency and drug problems! Amidst the self-ousting, some hilarious outbreaks occurred: Columbia approached the dais barefoot, the Chair shouted "Be flair-y and talk about drugs and all!", and the EB barred the USA for over-chatting! Hurling into the mix was India floor-smashing a water bottle to emphasise how poorly El Salvador treats its citizens; former Secretary General Hriday Adani was ecstatically racing in and consuming drugs only to get chased and arrested. "Victory to El Salvador! Mi gusto!", he shouted.

With justice now reinstated worldwide, the committee ascended to the second agenda item: 'Regulation of drug crackdowns with special emphasis on El Salvador'. In the GSL, multiple countries, such as Bolivia,

On a romantic note, a poem recitation with a rose was sent mid-session for the Executive Board Members! The committee saw the end of another eventful day with the introduction of two directives. Alas! Peace has no stable home in The United Nations Security Council, as it always finds its way into another crisis.

THE INDECISION OF WAR AND FUNDING

BY SHREYA VIJAYANAND AND AAROHI DESHPANDE

*Shattered windows and shattered hopes,
A piece of glass fallen on the floor
The pain suffered by Yemen
The only cause being their negligence*

With the competency of each country represented in the committee being rigorously tested, today's session commenced with great enthusiasm. Jordan had been blatantly criticised for not making any efforts to eradicate VNSAs. But haven't they been terrorising the world for decades?

The USA was accused of being that unrecognised terrorist organisation that bombs nations just because it's bored! Heated arguments one after another led to the unjustified terror intentions of the USA, the seemingly so-called P5.

The irony continues when all these countries that claim to require help and support themselves provide a safe haven for militant organisations. The major confusion that spread in the committee was whether these countries needed funding for the safety of their citizens or for the safety of their terrorists. Saudi Arabia mocks Iraq as a remake of Call of Duty, unable to identify the flying objects in the sky, when Saudi Arabia itself is in the same state of pity.

"Iran does need Netflix to premiere John Wick when they can live-action it."

Following the moderated caucus, Al Qaeda stormed into committee wrecking havoc. Justifying their fight in the name of Islam, Al Qaeda threatened America with suffering and proceeded to call them the epitome of 'white-collar diplomacy.' They claim their actions are only responses in order to survive the hunters hired by the USA. Amidst the chaos, the one questionable decision was Russia's siding with Al Qaeda.

Is Russia declaring war? Or is Russia behind the militant organisation itself?

Guess we'll have to wait and watch.

On a rainy morning, the delegates entered with a smile that brightened the room, ready to start the 2nd day with a bang. The committee began right from where it had left off, with keen delegates consulting other nations regarding their working papers and prospective resolutions. Amidst the smooth flow of the session, an unexpected interruption in the form of "Ra-Ra-Rasputin" caused a momentary distraction, eliciting gentle giggles from the attendees across the room.

Creating an efficient bloc was as arduous for the delegates as it was for the Palestinians to defeat the Israelis. The complete eradication of nuclear armaments and the prevention of producing destructive weapons was considered to be the sole objective of the ideal proposition.

The constant crosstalk by the delegates and the snide remarks of Japan made the cheeky EB compare the proceedings to a live YouTube commentary section; after which several delegates were barred. Amidst the smooth proceedings, an unexpected twist unfurled as Israel was summoned to dance as a form of apology to DPRK, which eventually led to the EB and the Head of Security frolicking to the Bhojpuri Melody of "Lollipop Lagelu" like there was no tomorrow.

ILLUSTRATED BY RIYAAN RANEY

After protracted deliberation and a possible conclusion to the matter at hand, the committee seemed to have proceeded onto the second agenda of the committee "Deliberation on Palestinian Statehood".

While the delegates prepared for the crisis, the committee was suddenly barged in by the Taliban protesting that the Muslims were being oppressed and threatened to bomb every country that did not follow the Sharia law and threatening to assassinate the Chinese president. They left the committee in distress when they announced that the secret affairs of working hand in hand with Hamas, Al-Qaeda and a P5 nation. This left the committee in a palpable mix of emotions leading to an intriguing end to the day; all the whilst inciting curiosity and inquisitiveness for the next day.

The EB was appalled to find one of the delegates passionately trying to create a new score for the third time amidst the session in Subway Surfers whilst the committee was still in session.

LIBERTY OF EXPRESSION: CHIEF OR THIEF?

BY ANAAMYA PANCHAL, JAANVI MOHNOT & RHEA ROY

Day two started off with the same faces but a whole new wave of enthusiasm.

The voices of the delegates filled the room with a unique 'josh' and set the committee to an enthusiastic onset.

It did not take long for the committee to spring into its first moderated caucus. 'Deliberating the rights of the LGBTQIA+ community' was introduced and passed. Controversial statements made by the delegate of China, Turkmenistan and Taiwan fuelled the committee's ongoing debate to an even more infuriating argument. "LGBTQ OR LGBT-GOO?!" quoted China and in response, was called a "hoard of chimpanzees" by Taiwan. Other countries argued back in favour of the delicate topic; bringing a fair balance and domination into the committee.

Onto the next moderated caucus! After a quick round of some important GSLs, "Protection of Journalism and Press in Light of Freedom of Speech" was introduced as the next moderated caucus.

Speaking about freedom of press, Pakistan, Palestine, China, and Turkmenistan cleverly stated that they were simply 'Protecting their people' by restricting journalism to an extent. Chaos arose as the Delegate of Ukraine stepped onto the floor with a printed picture of the President of Russia, Vladimir Putin, calling him a 'clown,' (and went on to crumple it as an act of disrespect.)

The tension in the room thickened as the age-old India-Pakistan rivalry came into the foreground. "Pakistan is the king of terrorists," India said furiously, to the devastating horrors of the territory activities of Pakistani terrorists. "India goes around destroying mosques because they are INSECURE about their OWN RELIGION!", China, Pakistan's ally, responded.

The committee was greeted by guest delegates and the International Press as an adrenaline-rushing Press conference took over. Countries were bombarded with nail-biting questions and put in a fix as delegates answered with utter care to uphold the respect of their country. Press members scrutinised and cross-questioned every word uttered by the conscious delegates of Germany, Turkmenistan, Israel, and Cuba. However, overcoming the intimidation, they stood true to their policies and represented their country's foreign policies.

Overall, the day was a rollercoaster of highs and lows, allies and arguments and blocs and barring. The second day was a good continuation of the first and set a great expectations for the final day of HFSMUN'23.
